VALUE IN THE

RICHARD A. ETLIN

Advance Praise for In Defense of Humanism

"Here is a valuable reintroduction to the notion that a masterpiece can in crucial ways transcend the immediate cultural circumstances of its production. A distinguished architectural historian sets out to defend aesthetic value from a wide range of contemporary theoretical assaults on it. I find myself occasionally disagreeing with Professor Etlin, while remaining enlightened by the angle of vision his own areas of knowledge afford. One must admire the way his detailed scholarship and the very clarity of his prose admit of reasoned controversy, and applaud his refusal to shackle his argument to political conservatism. This book should help focus the terms of a growing debate within the academy and beyond it as well."

— John Hollander, Yale University

"Richard Etlin is at his devastating best in exposing the misleading scholarship, the misquotations and distortions of the post-modernist critics whose work he opposes."

- Peter Holland, Trinity Hall, Cambridge University

"In a series of lovingly detailed interpretations of some of the master-works of the Western tradition, [Etlin] helps us to see that the artists themselves can be our best teachers, and that their works can help us find our way out of the contemporary critical maze and back to what truly matters – in eternity, when all the fads and fashions of the present have long since been forgotten."

- Ray Carney, Boston University

"Etlin's book will remain a landmark study in the debunking of establishment radicalism and in the restoration of imaginative culture."

- Donald Kuspit, State University of New York, Stony Brook
